The Australian Working Border Collie Registry was formed to centralise information on our working Border Collies (As separate from Show Registered). Border Collies have been widely used here for longer than in any other country outside Great Britain. In fact, it was the early importers of these dogs from the British Isles that coined the name Border Collie.

Presently each state working dog association currently accepts all working dogs, whether they are Border Collie, Border Collie cross, Kelpie, Huntaway, Cattle Dog, and the various crosses with other working, herding type breeds.

Officially, from an international point of view, that standard is not recognised as being of a particular breed. In order to register purebred Border Collies, they have to show that they have a four generation pedigree of pure lines, registered with a recognised Registry or be ISDS¹ registered. The Australian Working Border Collie Registry is the only Australian Registry recognised by the American Border Collie Association.

The Australian Working Border Collie Registry will not accept any appendix dogs. They must be fourth generation pure, in fact many of our imports actually pre date the ISDS, however currently most dogs registered with our various state bodies go back to the most recognisable ISDS Champion Bloodlines.

Our Registry maintains a high standard in its records and in its endeavor to promote the versatility of the working Border Collie. Many of the Australian strains have developed to suit the vast rugged conditions and stock but all trace directly back to imported Border Collies.

The Registry does not run any trials, it merely maintains records for the information of those wanting pedigrees, those wanting to buy and sell from registered Breeders and of course to register Working Border Collies.
